For Immediate Release: February 9, 2006

Deerfield Beach, FL - Advanced Public Safety (APS) has been awarded the prestigious title of 2006 Business of the Year by the South Florida Business Journal. The awards program was attended by over 500 people, and was held today at the Fort Lauderdale/Broward County Convention Center.

There were 14 categories which recognized businesses by size and genre. Criteria included percentage of growth, community involvement and employee benefits. APS' growth from 2004 to 2005 more than doubled from a $3 million company to over $7 million at the end of 2005. With many of APS' employees participating in local and national community service initiatives and superior benefit package, APS clearly stood apart in the category - General Businesses with revenues under $10 million.

Jeffrey Rubenstein, CEO of APS, credits their employees and clients. "Our technology makes life on the street easier for public safety professionals who risk their lives for us every day. It's an honor to be able to provide these solutions. Many of our employees have first responder backgrounds, so we are especially dedicated and sensitive to those challenges. It is truly an honor being recognized by the business community in this way."
